

Succession Planning

Protect Your Daily Operations

There will be 10 million more jobs than people in 2010
U.S. Department of Labor Statistics: The Occupational Outlook Handbook, Bulletin 2450

48% of mid-level managers say they might leave
The War for Talent: Michaels, Handfield-Jones, Axelrod, pg. 4-6

Is YOUR company ready for the battle that lies ahead?

We plan succession from the bottom up – from the front line. In the battle for talent, succession planning at the front line is a critically acclaimed new weapon.

Most succession planning programs start at the top, and work their way down to the middle of the organization. That leaves most critical workers out! Just like an army, your organization hinges on the performance of thousands of individual soldiers, your workers. Succession planning should begin at the front lines, be that the shopfloor, on the phones, or in the cubicles of your organization.

2Develop's unique approach to Succession Planning at the Front Line includes the critical steps to develop and lead this program using our unique Change Ladder.

